The new route apparently is between the River Yser and the Ypres-Hazebrouck-St. Omar Road. This plan of campaign pecessarily would involve attacks in the direction of Lille much more violent than those thus far recorded, as the allies at this point have been holding the Germans to their position with such remarkable consistency that any attempt to pass this point with such a great body of troops as the advance would entail would, in all likelihood, end in disaster to the movement.

throws the burden of information back upon the afternoon official communique, which again declares that "there is nothing new to report on the front between Nieuport and Dixmude."

While various reasons have been advanced for the temporary cessation of hostillities along this line, the one apparently logical reason is that the troops of both armies are utterly exhausted. No fighting machine ever trained that could stand the strain to which these men and war engines were subjected during the week in which this great battle raged the hottest. TEMPORARY LULL ALONG LINE

May Have Been Caused by an Armistice to Bury Dead and Remove Wounded or by Exhaustion of Contending Forces.

LONDON, October 29.—The four-teenth day of the battle of West Flanders, which is being fought over an area hardly greater than a good-sized farm in the State of lowa, found the allies holding their ground to the west of the Yser, and the Germans apparently bringing up more reinforcements to repeat their furious attempts to break through and reach the coast of France. All dispatchées seem to agree that there was a temporary lull yesterday in the fighting between Nieuport and Ypres, but the reports are far from unanimous as to whether this was due to an armistice to bury the dead and remove the wounded, which must thickly cover the field, or whether it was remove the wounded, which must thickly cover the field, or whether it was caused by the exhaustion of the contending forces or the German lack of ammunition.

The London press hazards all three guesses, and contends, at any rate, that the position of the allies is satisfactory. The public is warned, however, that the struggle in this quarter is not yet over, for the Germans if they find the northern route to Dunkirk and Calais impassable, may shift to the south with Boulogne an objective.

says sixteen British warships are operating on the coast.

This number never has been confirmed by British sources, but a dispatch from Dover reports that a battle-ship equipped with twelve-inch guns has gone to the assistance of the British monitors which have been shelling the Germans on shore. Other reports speak of heavy firing in the North Sea, as if a big naval engagement had taken place, but the admiraity here is silent. Taken an a whoic, the English interpretation of the news this morning was cheerful.
